

CENTRAL ASIA.

Herald Special Report from London.

British Press Confirmation of American News from Khiva.

The Nativist Insurrection Against Russia Announced to "John Bull" Three Weeks After Date.

What the Europeans Missed and What the American People Gained.

LONDON, Sept. 20, 1873. The following special report to the HERALD has been received from our correspondent in the British metropolis:—

The occurrence of an insurrection against the Russians, near Khiva, just now announced in the European journals, is the same event which was reported by the HERALD special correspondent in Central Asia some three weeks or a month since, and which was discredited and denied in Britain—indeed, in Europe generally.

The Important News Which the English Press Missed, Subsequently Denied and Now Published.

The following special despatch to the HERALD, received from our correspondent in Central Asia by telegraph, was published in our issue of Saturday, August 20, in New York. Its contents are just now printed by the London press and furnished to the English people from that metropolis, confirming the accuracy of the American special intelligence:—

"The HERALD special correspondent at Tashkent makes the following report from Central Asia, under date of August 20:—

Private letters just to hand report the fact of the breaking out of an insurrection at Khiva and in Khoand against the Russians, during the absence of General Kaufmann, the imperialist Commander-in-Chief.

General Verevkin, second in command under General Kaufmann, quelled the rebellious movement by force.

He destroyed Khiva and its fortifications, and now asks permission from the General-in-Chief to plough up the site of its former fortifications.

MONEY LEVIES BY THE MIRCOSCOVES. The rebellion in Khoand has been quieted, and exactions and fines levied on 600 of the more prominent persons who participated in it."

MOROCCO.

The Country Peaceable Towards the Throne Succession.

The report that a civil war had broken out in Morocco between the son and the brother of the deceased Emperor is not true.

PERSIA.

The Imperial Disposition Towards the Grand Vizier.

A despatch from Teheran says the trouble between the Shah and the late Grand Vizier grows out of local matters entirely, and does not, as reported, relate to the Reuter Commission.

ENGLAND.

The American Bank Forgers Under Discipline in Newgate—Discount on 'Change.

Both of the wardens of Newgate, who were charged with bribery in connection with the plot for the release of the Bank of England forgers, have been dismissed, notwithstanding the charges were declared unfounded. It is probable that they will seek legal redress.

The forgers are confined in separate cells of the prison and a strict watch is kept over them.

DISCOUNT ON 'CHANGE. The rate of discount in the open market for three months bills is 2-1/2 per cent, or 1-1/2 per cent below the Bank of England rate.

FRANCE.

Count de Chambord's Plan for a Re-Establishment of the Crown.

It is rumored to-day that Count de Chambord has intimated that when his right to sovereign rule over France has been formally recognized and homage paid him he will abdicate the throne in favor of the Count de Paris.

AUSTRIA.

The Empress Invalided by Illness.

Her Majesty the Empress Elizabeth of Austria is ill.

The Empress is in the thirty-seventh year of her age.

GERMANY.

Imperial Recognition of a New Church Pre-late—Amalgamation of the Territory of Hesse-Cassel.

Frederick William, Elector of Hesse-Cassel, has formally recognized and consented to the annexation of his territory to Prussia and renounced his right of property in the revenues of the Electorate, in compensation for which the Prussian Government has granted him an annuity of 2,000,000 thalers.

SPAIN.

Carlism, Socialism, Radicalism and Internationalism in Active Motion Against Republicanism.

Insurgent Fire on Bergea—Intransigent Caving in at Cartagena—Threatening Situation at Malaga—Jussit to the French Flag—The Internationalist Muster Roll.

Insurgent Position at Cartagena.

Madrid, Sept. 20, 1873. The Carlism forces have opened fire on the town of Bergea.

In consequence of the threatening attitude of the Carlism forces, the intransigent at Cartagena are disposed to surrender to the national forces. They will capitulate on the condition that the lives of the insurgent soldiers are spared, and that some other general than Martinez Campos is appointed to enter the city at the head of the republican troops.

Provisions are very scarce at Cartagena.

Socialist Demonstration Against Malaga.

Madrid, Sept. 20, 1873. The Correspondencia says the intransigent at Cartagena are disposed to surrender to the national forces.

He who expects, when he shall have grown white-haired and infirm, to sit under a tree and await the summons of the gods. He thinks that vigor only is life, and that life without it is like a sheath without a blade, a quiver without arrows.

He has no pity for cowardice, not even in the old and decrepit, and despises the egotism that clings to life.

He hunts, the rude huntsman, the combats and the dangers of some adventurous life content and his ideal is to barrow. He believes that women are voluptuous and false, playing the coquette from the cradle up.

At first he is so indifferent to Parthenia, who has voluntarily placed herself in servitude to him to redeem her father, that he would send her away because she is of no use.

He boasts that he will never know her as a chattel, and wishes she could make swords instead of wreaths cope with roses.

He is first brought to think tenderly of her because of her resemblance to his little brother, who has died.

The exhibition of his soft place in his heart is artfully employed by the dramatist, and is in keeping with the undertone of the play.

He is self-love from time to time. He is proud of the use of things rather than their beauty, and admires cups and vases as utensils, and not because Parthenia adorns them with flowers.

By degrees he comes to praise her workmanship, and awears by the beams of the sun it pleases him. But he wakes to a sense of Parthenia's purity slowly.

He strikes his sword and calls it his wife. He is almost a woman hater, not because he has not been deceived, but because he has not yet seen any woman worthy to be loved.

The conversation between him and Parthenia is ingeniously led up to love by a consideration of the different methods in which wives are wooed by the Greeks and the wild tribes he governs.

He loves to love, and is in a state of sensual appetite. But, bending beneath the indefinable influence of Parthenia, he begins pinching her for the very flowers which he has moments ago, he forbids her to pluck.

He ever prompts to bring the freest and best perfume. By his reference to his dead brother, it is shown that he was always the best friend of the loved, and the incredulity of his seemingly sudden change is softened.

Faithless is first wakened in love by Parthenia's words, and again he returns dreadfully to the burden of her song.

Two souls with but a single thought, Two hearts that beat as one.

At last, in an excess of passion, he informs Parthenia that she must be his. His wild habits gaining the upper hand he reminds Parthenia that she is his slave, but is struck dumb by her standing motionless as he utters the words.

He is about to kiss her, but she recoils, and in the midst of all this conduct he is conscious of his superiority to his brother, and he feels that he is a conqueror.

He is about to kiss her, but she recoils, and in the midst of all this conduct he is conscious of his superiority to his brother, and he feels that he is a conqueror.

He is about to kiss her, but she recoils, and in the midst of all this conduct he is conscious of his superiority to his brother, and he feels that he is a conqueror.

He is about to kiss her, but she recoils, and in the midst of all this conduct he is conscious of his superiority to his brother, and he feels that he is a conqueror.

He is about to kiss her, but she recoils, and in the midst of all this conduct he is conscious of his superiority to his brother, and he feels that he is a conqueror.

He is about to kiss her, but she recoils, and in the midst of all this conduct he is conscious of his superiority to his brother, and he feels that he is a conqueror.

He is about to kiss her, but she recoils, and in the midst of all this conduct he is conscious of his superiority to his brother, and he feels that he is a conqueror.

He is about to kiss her, but she recoils, and in the midst of all this conduct he is conscious of his superiority to his brother, and he feels that he is a conqueror.

He is about to kiss her, but she recoils, and in the midst of all this conduct he is conscious of his superiority to his brother, and he feels that he is a conqueror.

He is about to kiss her, but she recoils, and in the midst of all this conduct he is conscious of his superiority to his brother, and he feels that he is a conqueror.

He is about to kiss her, but she recoils, and in the midst of all this conduct he is conscious of his superiority to his brother, and he feels that he is a conqueror.

He is about to kiss her, but she recoils, and in the midst of all this conduct he is conscious of his superiority to his brother, and he feels that he is a conqueror.

He is about to kiss her, but she recoils, and in the midst of all this conduct he is conscious of his superiority to his brother, and he feels that he is a conqueror.

He is about to kiss her, but she recoils, and in the midst of all this conduct he is conscious of his superiority to his brother, and he feels that he is a conqueror.

He is about to kiss her, but she recoils, and in the midst of all this conduct he is conscious of his superiority to his brother, and he feels that he is a conqueror.

He is about to kiss her, but she recoils, and in the midst of all this conduct he is conscious of his superiority to his brother, and he feels that he is a conqueror.

He is about to kiss her, but she recoils, and in the midst of all this conduct he is conscious of his superiority to his brother, and he feels that he is a conqueror.

He is about to kiss her, but she recoils, and in the midst of all this conduct he is conscious of his superiority to his brother, and he feels that he is a conqueror.

He is about to kiss her, but she recoils, and in the midst of all this conduct he is conscious of his superiority to his brother, and he feels that he is a conqueror.

He is about to kiss her, but she recoils, and in the midst of all this conduct he is conscious of his superiority to his brother, and he feels that he is a conqueror.

He is about to kiss her, but she recoils, and in the midst of all this conduct he is conscious of his superiority to his brother, and he feels that he is a conqueror.

He is about to kiss her, but she recoils, and in the midst of all this conduct he is conscious of his superiority to his brother, and he feels that he is a conqueror.

He is about to kiss her, but she recoils, and in the midst of all this conduct he is conscious of his superiority to his brother, and he feels that he is a conqueror.

He is about to kiss her, but she recoils, and in the midst of all this conduct he is conscious of his superiority to his brother, and he feels that he is a conqueror.

He is about to kiss her, but she recoils, and in the midst of all this conduct he is conscious of his superiority to his brother, and he feels that he is a conqueror.

He is about to kiss her, but she recoils, and in the midst of all this conduct he is conscious of his superiority to his brother, and he feels that he is a conqueror.

He is about to kiss her, but she recoils, and in the midst of all this conduct he is conscious of his superiority to his brother, and he feels that he is a conqueror.

SPAIN.

Carlism, Socialism, Radicalism and Internationalism in Active Motion Against Republicanism.

Insurgent Fire on Bergea—Intransigent Caving in at Cartagena—Threatening Situation at Malaga—Jussit to the French Flag—The Internationalist Muster Roll.

Insurgent Position at Cartagena.

Madrid, Sept. 20, 1873. The Carlism forces have opened fire on the town of Bergea.

In consequence of the threatening attitude of the Carlism forces, the intransigent at Cartagena are disposed to surrender to the national forces.

Provisions are very scarce at Cartagena.

Socialist Demonstration Against Malaga.

Madrid, Sept. 20, 1873. The Correspondencia says the intransigent at Cartagena are disposed to surrender to the national forces.

He who expects, when he shall have grown white-haired and infirm, to sit under a tree and await the summons of the gods.

He thinks that vigor only is life, and that life without it is like a sheath without a blade, a quiver without arrows.

He has no pity for cowardice, not even in the old and decrepit, and despises the egotism that clings to life.

He hunts, the rude huntsman, the combats and the dangers of some adventurous life content and his ideal is to barrow.

He believes that women are voluptuous and false, playing the coquette from the cradle up.

At first he is so indifferent to Parthenia, who has voluntarily placed herself in servitude to him to redeem her father, that he would send her away because she is of no use.

He boasts that he will never know her as a chattel, and wishes she could make swords instead of wreaths cope with roses.

He is first brought to think tenderly of her because of her resemblance to his little brother, who has died.

The exhibition of his soft place in his heart is artfully employed by the dramatist, and is in keeping with the undertone of the play.

He is self-love from time to time. He is proud of the use of things rather than their beauty, and admires cups and vases as utensils, and not because Parthenia adorns them with flowers.

By degrees he comes to praise her workmanship, and awears by the beams of the sun it pleases him. But he wakes to a sense of Parthenia's purity slowly.

He strikes his sword and calls it his wife. He is almost a woman hater, not because he has not been deceived, but because he has not yet seen any woman worthy to be loved.

The conversation between him and Parthenia is ingeniously led up to love by a consideration of the different methods in which wives are wooed by the Greeks and the wild tribes he governs.

He loves to love, and is in a state of sensual appetite. But, bending beneath the indefinable influence of Parthenia, he begins pinching her for the very flowers which he has moments ago, he forbids her to pluck.

He ever prompts to bring the freest and best perfume. By his reference to his dead brother, it is shown that he was always the best friend of the loved, and the incredulity of his seemingly sudden change is softened.

Faithless is first wakened in love by Parthenia's words, and again he returns dreadfully to the burden of her song.

Two souls with but a single thought, Two hearts that beat as one.

At last, in an excess of passion, he informs Parthenia that she must be his. His wild habits gaining the upper hand he reminds Parthenia that she is his slave, but is struck dumb by her standing motionless as he utters the words.

He is about to kiss her, but she recoils, and in the midst of all this conduct he is conscious of his superiority to his brother, and he feels that he is a conqueror.

He is about to kiss her, but she recoils, and in the midst of all this conduct he is conscious of his superiority to his brother, and he feels that he is a conqueror.

He is about to kiss her, but she recoils, and in the midst of all this conduct he is conscious of his superiority to his brother, and he feels that he is a conqueror.

He is about to kiss her, but she recoils, and in the midst of all this conduct he is conscious of his superiority to his brother, and he feels that he is a conqueror.

He is about to kiss her, but she recoils, and in the midst of all this conduct he is conscious of his superiority to his brother, and he feels that he is a conqueror.

He is about to kiss her, but she recoils, and in the midst of all this conduct he is conscious of his superiority to his brother, and he feels that he is a conqueror.

He is about to kiss her, but she recoils, and in the midst of all this conduct he is conscious of his superiority to his brother, and he feels that he is a conqueror.

He is about to kiss her, but she recoils, and in the midst of all this conduct he is conscious of his superiority to his brother, and he feels that he is a conqueror.

He is about to kiss her, but she recoils, and in the midst of all this conduct he is conscious of his superiority to his brother, and he feels that he is a conqueror.

He is about to kiss her, but she recoils, and in the midst of all this conduct he is conscious of his superiority to his brother, and he feels that he is a conqueror.

He is about to kiss her, but she recoils, and in the midst of all this conduct he is conscious of his superiority to his brother, and he feels that he is a conqueror.

He is about to kiss her, but she recoils, and in the midst of all this conduct he is conscious of his superiority to his brother, and he feels that he is a conqueror.

He is about to kiss her, but she recoils, and in the midst of all this conduct he is conscious of his superiority to his brother, and he feels that he is a conqueror.

He is about to kiss her, but she recoils, and in the midst of all this conduct he is conscious of his superiority to his brother, and he feels that he is a conqueror.

He is about to kiss her, but she recoils, and in the midst of all this conduct he is conscious of his superiority to his brother, and he feels that he is a conqueror.

He is about to kiss her, but she recoils, and in the midst of all this conduct he is conscious of his superiority to his brother, and he feels that he is a conqueror.

He is about to kiss her, but she recoils, and in the midst of all this conduct he is conscious of his superiority to his brother, and he feels that he is a conqueror.

He is about to kiss her, but she recoils, and in the midst of all this conduct he is conscious of his superiority to his brother, and he feels that he is a conqueror.

He is about to kiss her, but she recoils, and in the midst of all this conduct he is conscious of his superiority to his brother, and he feels that he is a conqueror.

He is about to kiss her, but she recoils, and in the midst of all this conduct he is conscious of his superiority to his brother, and he feels that he is a conqueror.

He is about to kiss her, but she recoils, and in the midst of all this conduct he is conscious of his superiority to his brother, and he feels that he is a conqueror.

He is about to kiss her, but she recoils, and in the midst of all this conduct he is conscious of his superiority to his brother, and he feels that he is a conqueror.

He is about to kiss her, but she recoils, and in the midst of all this conduct he is conscious of his superiority to his brother, and he feels that he is a conqueror.

He is about to kiss her, but she recoils, and in the midst of all this conduct he is conscious of his superiority to his brother, and he feels that he is a conqueror.

He is about to kiss her, but she recoils, and in the midst of all this conduct he is conscious of his superiority to his brother, and he feels that he is a conqueror.

MUSICAL AND DRAMATIC NOTES

Miss Lillie Eldridge has been performing in a new piece called "Olive," in Canada, during the past fortnight.

Mr. Lester Wallack begins a week's engagement at Samuel's Park Theatre, in Brooklyn, to-morrow evening, in the comedy of "Central Park."

Mr. Jefferson's engagement at Booth's is among the successes of the season. The mainstay of the engagement is the comedy of "The Two Friends."

Mr. Wilford Morgan, tenor; Mr. Joseph Maas, tenor; Mr. William Carleton, baritone; and Mr. Edward Reylor, conductor, of the English Opera Troupe, arrived by the Anysinia yesterday.

Mme. Van Zandt is expected to-morrow by the Oceanic. The new play, "Haunted House," to be produced at the Grand Opera House on Tuesday evening, affords a fine opportunity for sensational scenic display.

The chance has been taken by Mr. Daly, and the admirers of gorgeous stage dressing are promised some thrilling effects.

At the Lyceum Theatre "Notre Dame," its full course, and other novelties will be delayed. The play is drawing to the Lyceum its proper share of patrons, though "graduated scale of admission prices" may have something to do with the present success of the theatre.

Mass Lydia Thompson and her company will give their last performances at the Olympic Theatre this week, and next week they start on what is their sixth annual tour in this country.

The burlesque of "Sindbad" and "Aladdin" are yet on the bills, and it is confidently announced by the manager that they give opportunity for the display of the special attractions of the company.

The regular season at Wallack's Theatre will begin on Tuesday, September 30. The opening piece will be a three-act comedy called "Barvis's Book," in which Mr. Sothorn will appear.

This and a new piece, adapted from the French for Mr. Sothorn, will probably fill out the time until November when Mr. Lester Wallack will return to his own stage.

The old comedies are the main features of Mr. Wallack's programme, but during the period of his performances he is to produce several new pieces which have been written for him.

At the Germania Theatre the opening week was very successful. Mr. Neudendorff's comedy company appeared in a number of dramas, and four new opera singers were heard for the first time.

The manager intends to continue the present operatic during the season. To-morrow evening Offenbach's "Verlobung bei der Lanterne" will be given, and "Les Brigands" will follow it next week.

The latter opera has never been sung here in the German language.

The eighth season of Theodore Thomas' summer nights' concert closed on Tuesday evening at Central Park Garden with a Wagner night.

The programme, with the exception of Beethoven's eighth symphony and a violin solo played by Mr. Listemann, consisted of compositions by Richard Wagner. The season just terminated was the most successful one of the series, and it is generally admitted that these concerts—of which nearly 150 were given during the summer—have become an actual necessity to our music-loving public.

The programmes have been not only entertaining in the highest degree, but also very instructive, and contained, besides the works of the masters, a number of novelties never before heard in this city.

This is the last week of the Atlantic Oceanic Company at the Broadway Theatre. During the week they will perform "La Fille de Madame Angot," except on Wednesday evening, when "La Grande Duchesse" is to be given.

The company after leaving New York is to sing in other cities, closing in Baltimore on the 4th of October, and then to sail for Havana. The first performance at the Tacon Theatre is to be given on Sunday, the 12th.

After the departure of Mile. Alméida's troupe from the Broadway of the company of the theatre will play a local drama, "About Town," for a week, before the appearance of Mr. J. K. Emmett. In "About Town" Miss Walton, who is described as "a pretty and fascinating actress," makes her first appearance.

WEATHER REPORT.

W. B. REYNOLDS, OFFICE OF THE CHIEF SIGNAL OFFICER, WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 21—A. M.

Probabilities.

FOR SUNDAY, IN THE MIDDLE AND EASTERN STATES, RISING BAKOMETER, NORTHWEST WINDS AND CLEAR WEATHER.

For the Southern States, northerly winds, rising temperature, partly cloudy or clear weather.

For the Ohio Valley and lower lakes, northeast to southwest winds, rising temperature, partly cloudy and clear weather.

For the upper lakes, falling barometer, southerly winds increasing to fresh, cloudy weather and occasional rain.

For the Northwest, westerly winds, rising barometer, low temperature, partly cloudy and clearing weather.

The Weather in This City Yesterday.

The following record will show the change in the temperature for the past twenty-four hours in comparison with the corresponding day of last year, as indicated by the thermometer at Hudson's Pharmacy, Herald Building:—

1872. 1873.

3 A. M. 73 54 3 P. M. 72 65

6 A. M. 71 53 9 P. M. 72 61

12 M. 70 52 9 P. M. 69 53

Average temperature yesterday, 62° 59°

Average temperature for corresponding date last year, 62° 59°

Average temperature for corresponding week last year, 62° 59°

Average temperature for the past week, 61° 47°

A NEVADA CATASTROPHE

Fire in the Mines—Several Lives Lost.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 20, 1873.

At Gold Hill, Nev., at three o'clock this morning a fire broke out in the blacksmith shop belonging to the Beicher Mining Company, situated 1,300 feet below the level, in the Yellow Jacket mine, a short distance north of the Jackson shaft.

The timbers being very dry the fire spread rapidly, and very soon filled the Yellow Jacket, Crown Point and Beicher mines with gas and smoke. About a quarter past three o'clock an explosion occurred which put out the lights in all three mines.

The workmen at this time were hurrying from the Crown Point and Beicher shafts, and all escaped except six, whose bodies have not yet been recovered.

Communication between the Imperial on the north and the Crown Point on the south has been cut off. There is no danger of the fire spreading, as it is confined to a place where there is but little timber and must soon die out. Fremont are on the ground, but their services cannot be brought into requisition.

Work will be commenced probably in the Beicher and Crown Point mines to-morrow, as they have sustained but little damage. The following were killed and their bodies recovered:—Lewis Lousia, J. B. Waters, W. Broadwater, Tom Niles, J. Cusick, George B. Nudd. A number of others are suffering from burns and inhalation of gas.

A rumor is current that others of the workmen have perished, and the people are greatly excited. The mine is said to be the only one in Nevada where there